

Essay: plan and structure of the text

Any text, be it a thesis, essay, article, story or essay, must have a clear structure. What can we say about an essay?

It also happens that writing an essay is lazy, there is neither time nor desire. Therefore, you can ask to write my essay for me for cheap for a small fee. In this case, you can order it. A few hours - and everything will be ready. But if you decide to write it yourself, follow these rules:

The essay differs from many other students' works by its "freedom of creation. Alas, we all know: the more freedom, the more responsibility. Gaining this very freedom, you should think through the structure of the future essay yourself. The structure depends largely on the goals, form, type, and scope of work. An essay will start with a tie, an essay illustration - with one or more theses. An essay of the "causal analysis" type will have to be built according to the laws of logic. And in no other way.

You can just think of the structure. But it is better to take a piece of paper and sketch an approximate plan. Plan - the "skeleton" of the text, on which you will later build up the "flesh". Any text needs a plan, an essay it needs first.

We make a plan.

Any written work, any text has:

Introduction

By "introduction" and "conclusion" we can mean the first and last paragraph. Formally, these text elements should not be referred to. The first paragraph or the first part of the text introduces the reader to the case, brings him to the problem, which is devoted to the essay. There is no need for a long introduction - one or two paragraphs will be quite enough.

The main part

Most of it requires the greatest attention. Especially when making a plan. It may have different structure:

Thesis-arguing, thesis-arguing, thesis-arguing, etc. In this case, first we fix a thought, then we prove it;

Reverse structure (facts-output). We describe the situation or provide facts and make a conclusion. And so - several times.

Thesis and several arguments (facts). In this case, we confirm one idea with several illustrations. The thesis can be either at the beginning or after these illustrations.

By "thesis" we mean a short finished idea, which the author wants to convey to the reader of the essay. By "argument" we mean some proof of the thesis. It can be a situation from life, news, the opinion of a scientist, scientific theory or a fact proven by science.

Ideally, one thesis should confirm two arguments. One reader may find it inconclusive, and three will overload the text. However, you are free to bring to your thesis any number of arguments - much depends on the thought itself, the logic of the story, the volume, the plan of the text. It is important to preserve the logic, conciseness and imagery of the text.

Conclusion .

In conclusion, as a rule, they summarize everything that was said in the essay. The author together with the reader sums up. It is important that the conclusions are not far-fetched and do not appear "out of nowhere". In the conclusion - only what the reader should come to, having familiarized himself with the main part of your work.

Structure of the main part of the text

It is important that the main part is built according to the laws of logic. You can go from simple to complex, you can perform analysis or synthesis, you can use the deduction and induction method. In order to build a logical text you can use the deduction and induction method:

- fix the thesis;
- select several arguments for each thesis;
- line up the theses in a logical sequence: one thought should flow from another.

You will already have a detailed plan in front of you. It remains to "build" the text on it - and your essay will be almost ready. But before you start working on the text, check if the theses are arranged in a logical sequence and if the evidence is convincing enough.

Where to start?

It is best to start with the main part of the text. Introduction and conclusion are easier to finish after - after you are sure that the basis of your essay is logical and understandable to the reader. If you have taken care of the detailed plan, you can also write in order - it will be easy.
